part of the Indian Council for Medical Research

One of the most important medical studies, Part I based on 10,000 cases of speech disorders in children, was conducted by Dr. S. S. Bhattacharya, Director, All India Institute of Speech and Hearing, Mysore, 20-30 years ago.

RESULTS

With the help of 10,000 cases of speech disorders, one can draw a general conclusion. It is true that they are as many different types of speech disorders as there are children, but there are certain common features which are found in all speech disorders. These are the main types of speech disorders. There is a great majority of cases with no history of injury or disease of any sort in the family. There is also a great majority of cases with no history of any kind of physical or mental retardation. In addition to a general type of speech disorder, there are other types of speech disorders such as those due to brain damage, due to disease of the ear, due to organic disease of the mouth, etc. These may be called as secondary speech disorders. These are usually associated with other diseases.

The results of this study of speech disorders in children can tell us, how common speech disorders are. This is a very important finding in any field of medicine because we can now estimate the percentage of children having speech disorders. We can also know the exact nature of the speech disorder by certain specific diagnostic tests, such as the speech delay test and others.

Another result of this study of speech disorders in children is that there are certain types of speech disorders which are not due to any of the above causes. These are called as primary speech disorders. These are the types of speech disorders which are not due to any other cause than the speech disorder itself. These are called as primary speech disorders. These are the types of speech disorders which are not due to any other cause than the speech disorder itself. These are called as primary speech disorders.

These findings are very useful for many children who have speech disorders. These are the types of speech disorders which are not due to any other cause than the speech disorder itself.
